In 2020, Virginia State University announced the John Mercer Langston Institute (JMLI) for African American Political Leadership. The JMLI is devoted to developing, empowering, and cultivating African American leadership in the Commonwealth of Virginia through innovative training, policy collection and assistance, programming, research, and networking.

In 2021, Virginia State University announced an innovative new initiative that will position the University to address public health disparities within underserved communities. The newly created VSU Public Health Institute (VSUPHI) serves as a resource for marginalized communities and seeks to improve public health outcomes.

In 2020, Virginia State University received the largest single donor gift in the 138-year history of the University. Author and Philanthropist Mackenzie Scott gifted VSU $30 Million. The University will use the funds to continue to transform lives through education as the University works to fulfill its mission and the tenets of the University's new strategic plan.

In 2021, Virginia State University unveiled an initiative that provides access for an estimated 300 students who live near the VSU campus to attend the University at no cost for tuition. The initiative is part of The Virginia College Affordability Network (VCAN) which seeks to address the regional needs relating to access and completion.
